Just checking to see if anyone in the community has any thoughts on my previous note:

When I was researching online for Super G/Airflight watches, I noticed that, unlike my grandfather's watch, the 1957/1958 introductory model seemed to have an embossed "Super G" logo on the watch face as well. This advertisement shows that detail. Do you think there were other versions in that year, or perhaps that the "Super G" logo was only on the initial year's model, and then pulled in subsequent years? To your point, I've also seen models with the "Precision" logo on the face, and wonder when that was introduced. My watch features neither marking, which I find curious.
