Hi everyone,

Just wanted to get some opinions if I could on whether or not you guys figure this is original?

Thanks very much in advance for any opinions!

I will get a movement shot soon :)

Welcome!

No template needed. ;-) I'd say this is original, nice patina on the dial.

I'll let the Pan Am experts chime in.

Interesting that the wadsworth number indicates 45/46 but the style number points to 1944. I guess that just means it was manufactured at the very end of 44 or very beginning of 45...

I would say 1945-46 based on the Wadsworth G6 prefix of your Ace. If you want to see some bling check out this thread!

Edit: struck out Captain and replaced with Ace, ah heck they're all the same. :d

Depends... but I am not an expert on panams. So nothing to add.

But very nice watch though! Is it a family piece?

Maybe introduce yourself in the new member forum?

No one knows your name. ;-)

My money says that's all original. Definitely a less common dial style too.

Yes I definitely haven't seen too many of this dial variation while looking at pics.
Thanks

Agreed... all original dial, hands and case.... Movement too, if the serial starts A-xxxxxx

So is it rule of thumb to go by the style number or the case serial to nail down a date of manufacture?

Both. ;)

The style number only gives us the date of introduction for the style, it doesn't tell us when it was made. But most styles were only made for a few years (not usually more than 5). Using this rule of thumb, your watch was manufactured in 1944-49 (but keep in mind, only the beginning of the range is certain, that's why it's the only date provided in the table).

The case serial, in this case, tells us more, because we understand the Wadsworth serial system (opening two digits are a date code). G6 dates to 1945-46, as mentioned above. However, most case serial systems are not well understood, so for most Gruens, the style number is as close as you get. So the style numbers are our rule of thumb, but sometimes we can do better.

The movement serial would provide confirmation of the case date, and in so doing confirm the originality of the movement/case combination (we know all parts are factory Gruen, but "all 420ss movements look the same" to someone with a broken movement and a functional spare). We understand movement serials "well enough" to help with dating this model, but the system is not fully understood.

We know more about the Panamerican model because it's popular, so people have studied it and figured things out. Don't expect a date within a year for most other Gruens!

Ah ok!

That makes sense because I have always heard that Gruens are difficult to date.

Thanks a lot for the detailed response!

I'll check the movement serial and report back :)

Well I can't really make out a serial.
Doesn't matter, just going to enjoy this cool watch.
Thanks again for everyone's help :)
